If your generator is acting strange or won ' t start, checking the oil should be one of the first things you do.

Although generators run on standard motor fuel, not all of them use the same kind. If the oil is low, check your RV owner ' s manual to see what type of oil you should use in the generator.

If the fuel cap vent is clogged, the generator fuel tank will experience a vacuum called vapor lock. That stops the flow of fuel into the carburetor. A simple way to determine if this is the issue is to loosen the fuel cap and run the generator. If the generator runs smoothly, then you know you need to clean the fuel cap or just replace it.
