Values are built into the use of the term. Here we are not viewing education simply in terms of the extrinsic social and economic purposes it may serve within the wider society. Certainly education maybe viewed as an important means of producing human capital, defined in terms of knowledge and skills that have high commodity value in labor markets.

Employers are recognizing that formal education credentials are not the only way to recognize and develop talent and that lifelong learning may be the desired trait. Thanks to the fast pace of today's knowledge economy, organizations are seeing lifelong learning as a core component in employee development. The idea is that employees should engage in constant personal learning in order to be adaptable and flexible for the organization to stay competitive and relevant.

2 November 2017. The current issue of the International Review of Education - Journal of Lifelong Learning (IRE) explores how the practical value of lifelong learning is inseparable from its democratic, egalitarian and progressive values. Lifelong learning is about more than diversifying the loci and modi of learning, more than expanding access and opportunity, more indeed than transferring primary agency from the educator to the learner.
